670000 physiotherapists from 122 member countries of World Physiotherapy are called in every year to celebrate the role of physiotherapy in maintaining the wellbeing of the population through the crucial contribution of the specialists in this field to improve the mobility, independence and functional abilities.

The 8th of September was chosen by World Physiotherapy as the World Physiotherapy Day in 1996, with the goal of promoting the importance of physiotherapy within the healthcare system, both at a national and international level.

Across the globe, we celebrate the World Physiotherapy Day differently, but we all hold the hope that every one of us can be the voice of this profession and that we can help our patients lead a normal life.
2020 is the year of great challenges for our profession as well!

We are called in, together with the other specialists, to make our contribution to the healthcare system and support those in need of physiotherapeutical services, so as to maximise the quality of their life from a physical, mental, emotional and social perspective.
The pandemic is a unique and unprecedented scenario for humanity, and World Physiotherapy has globally mobilised the physiotherapists to find solutions and strategies in order to provide rehabilitation services tailored to the patients suffering from Covid-19, through a holistic, continuous and safe approach.
Dear colleagues,

Never forget that the evolution of our profession lies within diversity and manifests through our ability to cooperate, to be open-minded and willing to contribute to the development of the physiotherapy community in order to create the perfect symbiosis for evolution!
